Instructional Techniques

Audio and/or Visual Presentations (Power points, videos, animations, 3D images, etc...) used during lecture and/or uploaded to the course management system Collaborative group work Small group or directed class discussions. Student-instructor conferences to provide assistance or feedback on assignments and exams Provide feedback (handwritten, verbal, and/or electronic) for exams and assignments.

Reading Assignments

Students will spend 2 hours per week reading assigned chapters from the textbook, additional course handouts, and/or websites which emphasize key concepts to facilitate understanding of the material and participation in class discussions.

Writing Assignments

Students will spend two hours per week researching for and writing papers that compare and contrast belief systems across various subsistence patterns. The paper will require the use of research from peer-reviewed articles.

Out-of-class Assignments

Each student will spend two to four hours visiting a religious establishment/ ceremony/ ritual outside of his/her own belief system.

The student will interview a practitioner of that belief to increase the students awareness of the belief system and its connection to other aspects of culture.

Demonstration of Critical Thinking

Students will make in-class presentations and lead discussion sessions comparing and contrasting modern and ancient types of religious practices and how they relate to changes in the environment, technology, and superstructure within a society.

Required Writing, Problem Solving, Skills Demonstration

Students will work in small groups to discuss the ethnographic research methodologies used by anthropologist to study a cultures religious beliefs. Furthermore students will evaluate ethnographic reports and identify the uses and limitations of ethnographic methods when exploring belief systems and determine an appropriate methodology for their own research project. Students will write short essays/ journals about obserations they made about a variety of belief systems they observed throughout the semester. This requires them to compare and contrast a variety of belief systems across the world.

Eligible Disciplines
