Instructional Techniques

Communicative-oriented language activities based on thematically organized exercises through teacher-student and/or student group interaction. 2. Task-oriented group exercises allow students to use the language in a functional manner. 3. Grammar learning through lecture and application of ideas is stressed to the extent needed to support the language skills at the level of usage. 4. The primary use of the target language in the classroom encourages students to apply critical thinking skills such as deduction in acquisition of the material. 5. Readings allow for expansion of vocabulary, development of critical thinking skills (making predictions, and inferences, analysis, etc.) and heightened awareness of cultural similarities and diversity. 6. Listening comprehension skills are reinforced through instructor input, audiovisual components of the course, and language laboratory activities. Both listening passages and video episodes present the language in context and provide additional cultural information. 7. Discussion of historical, cultural, economic topics encourages students to consider and respect cultural differences and to be aware of global similarities. 8. The use of teacher-guided activities on the Internet allows students to perform specific, functionally oriented tasks using the most up-to-date information on a variety of global issues.
